European Business Statement “Scaling up action for nature”

We are calling on all businesses to step up and scale up action, accelerate and innovative collaboration, and more precisely to:

- Value natural assets and ecosystems and embed these in business strategy and operations, including local communities;
- Integrate biodiversity as strongly as climate into the ambition and innovation of all business activities, and be established in consideration of current and future business risks;
- Build on frameworks and partnerships already in place, including local communities, shareholders, clients, and public authorities;
- Invest in biodiversity protection and restoration, and be established in consideration of the local communities, shareholders, clients, and public authorities;
- Ask for precise and pragmatic definitions for “nature-positive” practices, as well as consistent policies adopted and enforced by the EU Commission and other public authorities.

We therefore call on the European Union to:

- Implement the European Biodiversity Strategy, and the proposal for a new legislation to ensure full implementation of the EU Biodiversity Strategy for 2030 and the proposal for a regulation on corporate reporting on biodiversity.
- Integrate biodiversity as strongly as climate into the ambition and innovation of all business activities, and be established in consideration of current and future business risks.
- Invest in biodiversity protection and restoration, and be established in consideration of the local communities, shareholders, clients, and public authorities.
- Ask for precise and pragmatic definitions for “nature-positive” practices, as well as consistent policies adopted and enforced by the EU Commission and other public authorities.

We believe that a European Business Statement in partnership with a range of stakeholders with long-term interest of nature and humanity, including leading businesses, investors, non-profits, and foundations, will have strong and positive potential impact.

We therefore call on all businesses to step up and scale up action, accelerate and innovative collaboration, and more precisely to:

- Value natural assets and ecosystems and embed these in business strategy and operations, including local communities;
- Integrate biodiversity as strongly as climate into the ambition and innovation of all business activities, and be established in consideration of current and future business risks;
- Build on frameworks and partnerships already in place, including local communities, shareholders, clients, and public authorities;
- Invest in biodiversity protection and restoration, and be established in consideration of the local communities, shareholders, clients, and public authorities;
- Ask for precise and pragmatic definitions for “nature-positive” practices, as well as consistent policies adopted and enforced by the EU Commission and other public authorities.

We therefore call on the European Union to:

- Implement the European Biodiversity Strategy, and the proposal for a new legislation to ensure full implementation of the EU Biodiversity Strategy for 2030 and the proposal for a regulation on corporate reporting on biodiversity.
- Integrate biodiversity as strongly as climate into the ambition and innovation of all business activities, and be established in consideration of current and future business risks.
- Invest in biodiversity protection and restoration, and be established in consideration of the local communities, shareholders, clients, and public authorities.
- Ask for precise and pragmatic definitions for “nature-positive” practices, as well as consistent policies adopted and enforced by the EU Commission and other public authorities.

We believe that a European Business Statement in partnership with a range of stakeholders with long-term interest of nature and humanity, including leading businesses, investors, non-profits, and foundations, will have strong and positive potential impact.